

Worried about your pet being lost or stolen with no means of permanent identification?

Why Micro Chip?

Micro chipping your pet is an ideal way to protect them against becoming lost or stolen. Using a microchip is a safe and permanent way of identifying your pet so they can be returned to you.

The microchipping procedure is easy, fast, and requires the same amount of time as a routine vaccination. The microchip that is implanted beneath your pet's skin is programmed with a number that through M4S is registered to you with all your information, including an emergency contact.

This chip requires no power source or battery but it does require a scanner to read it.

Your pet's microchip can never break or become lost like a collar or tag and the information can be updated whenever necessary.

If your pet becomes lost or stolen, any vet or shelter with a scanner can confirm the identity of your pet and get in touch with you immediately to return your pet safely!
